Panel: Minorities in Pakistan’s Legal Framework

The panel will deliberate on how members of the minority community in Pakistan experience the country’s judicial system, both as members of the legal profession, and as ordinary citizens. The findings of two studies will be presented, one of which is based on primary data, focusing on members of minority communities who work as lawyers or judges, and describes their experiences. The second study focuses on whether the Pakistani state has succeeded in implementing the core principles of equality of all citizens as enshrined in the Constitution.
